Russel P. Herrold, '16

THE SUCCESS of any organization depends upon the quality of its leadership, and the Ohio University Alumni Association is fortunate to have at its head a man like Russell P. Herrold, '16.

For the past two years Mr. Herrold has devoted a great deal of his time and seemingly unlimited energy to the progress of the association. As president for two terms, he has been instrumental in developing a plan of re-organization geared to the needs of a rapidly expanding alumni body. The pace he has set for getting things done is evidenced by the great number of re-organizational meetings which have been carried out among alumni chapters this spring.

For Mr. Herrold, such plans mean working with Alumni Secretary Marty Hecht in drawing up a new constitution and by-laws in order to get the system working, arranging special meetings of the alumni officers, and conferring with university administrators.

Still he has found time to head the sesquicentennial scholarship fund drive in the Zanesville area and serve as a director of the Ohio University Fund, Inc.

As president of the Alumni Association, Mr. Herrold also represents Ohio University's 20,000 graduates at meetings of the University Board of Trustees.

A graduate of the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, Mr. Herrold now lives in Zanesville and is an executive of the Anchor Hocking Glass Corporation of Lancaster. He joined the corporation in 1939, after serving as president of the Mosaic Tile Company in Zanesville for 12 years.

When Gas Transport, Inc., an Anchor Hocking subsidiary, was incorporated in 1941, Mr. Herrold was elected a director and vice-president of the subsidiary—offices he still holds.

July 1, 1942 he was placed in charge of the Closure Division of Anchor Hocking, and, on December, 1943, he was elected vice president in charge of Closure Manufacture Operations for the parent corporation. He was elected a director and chairman of the board of Anchor Cap & Closure Corporation of Canada, Limited, an Anchor Hocking subsidiary, on April 15, 1953.

In addition to his work with the Ohio University Alumni Association, he is president of the Bethesda Hospital Association of Zanesville and vice president and director of The First Trust & Savings Bank of Zanesville.

Mrs. Herrold is the former Wilma Lane, '18. Their son, Russell Phillips Herrold, Jr., an attorney, lives in Columbus with his wife and young son, Russell P. Herrold, III.

two good questions

This column seldom deals with the subject of athletics. But in traveling to several alumni chapter meetings this spring, I frequently have been asked two important questions about the Mid-American Conference—How strong is it? Why don't we read more about it in the papers?

The first of these questions is easily enough answered. Records speak for themselves. The second is more difficult, however, because it seems to conflict with the answer to the first.

Most alumni are surprised to hear that the Mid-American Conference is one of the strongest in the country today. If that sounds like the optimism of an over-enthusiastic press agent, all you need to do is look at the facts.

Take, for instance, the past year. The conference as a whole ranked right up there with the best of them in any sport in which it took part.

Western Michigan, now in the national baseball play-offs, not only won the Mid-Am title, but had as good a record (7-2) against Big Ten teams as the winner of the Big Ten Conference (Ohio State—9-3). On top of that, the Mid-Am winners beat OSU in the district NCAA play-offs to advance into the national championship tourney.

In track last month Miami's Tom Jones surpassed the national collegiate record in the shot put by almost a foot, and, by the time this magazine reaches your home, he may have done the same thing in the NCAA meet. Miami, you remember, also defeated Indiana in football last year, keeping the Hoosiers back in their own territory most of the game.

Ohio University has four boys competing in the NCAA golf tournament this year. Compare their team scores for the year (see sports page) with those of teams in other conferences and you will see that the Mid-Am ranks high. The same is true in the sport of swimming. As a matter of fact, there may be some Mid-Am swimmers on the next Olympic team, although their names will be withheld for the present at the request of their coaches.

Marquette, with a string of 21 straight basketball victories this year, and ranked among the nation's leaders, had to go into overtime to nose out Miami, Mid-Am champions, in the NCAA. And Miami, by no means breezed into the Mid-Am title. They were beaten by Western Michigan, Ohio University, and Marshall, battling the latter team down to the wire for the crown.

Western Michigan's championship tennis team this year managed to humble teams from other conferences wherever it went. It was the only team to blank Notre Dame during the season. Yet they had to fight all the way to gain the Mid-Am title.

All of this leads to the second question—why don't alumni living outside a small area of Ohio hear more about the conference?

There seems to be one answer that overshadows all others. No one would attempt to show that the Mid-American Conference is as strong as the Big Ten. It isn't. However, records show that the Mid-Am does compare in strength with some of the other "major" conferences such as the Rocky Mountain Conference.

Because the Mid-American territory overlaps that of the Big Ten, however, it has thus far been designated a "secondary conference." This is the result of a reluctance to name two major conferences in one area.

So there you have it. On the teletype machines that carry wire service news to newspapers, the Mid-American Conference is listed as a secondary conference. As a result, it gets secondary coverage away from home.

But the Tad Potters and Dow Finsterwalds and Tom Joneses, and many others are gradually changing the picture. It won't hurt any, either, if alumni of the Mid-American schools talk it up a little.—Ed.

COMMENCEMENT speaker, Senator John W. Bricker, and President John C. Baker lead the Ohio University faculty in the academic processional to Memorial Auditorium.

Ohio's Newest Alumni

AN ACADEMIC processional across the College Green to Memorial Auditorium heralded the 1955 June graduation in which 523 young men and women were awarded degrees. For the second consecutive year, rain forced the June 12 exercises indoors.

Ohio's senior senator, John W. Bricker, gave the 1955 graduates a picture of the world's conflicting forms of progress in his address "Progress Toward What?"

In exploring the subject of social and economic changes, Senator Bricker pointed out that "rosy predictions about progress are entirely justified when viewed solely in the context of scientific and industrial promise."

However, he said, "even the data on the material side of our existence, while encouraging, contains many red flags. For example, my generation bequeathes to yours a national debt in excess of 275 billion dollars; semiconfiscatory taxes; a social security system which requires you to pay for our windfalls; an uneasy peace; and a world that is one-third communist."

On the other hand, the senator said, "we leave you a marvelous physical plant, a strong national defense, and our Federal Constitution, somewhat battered it is true, but still the best safeguard of economic, political, and civil liberty on earth."

The senator added that "much misunderstanding about progress flows from the erroneous belief that reaction is its opposite. The issue is not progress versus reaction. It is progress toward a more civilized society as opposed to progress toward a society of barbarians. Liberals have been especially prone to ignore the question: Progress toward what? Reading history merely as a contest between progress and reaction, they attribute all evil to 'the dead hand of the past'."

President Baker presided at commencement exercises, and conferred degrees and diplomas upon 328 men and 195 women. Bachelor degrees numbered 448, masters degrees 38, and associate in arts diplomas 37. Degrees according to colleges were: Arts and Sciences, 121; Commerce, 112; Education, 91; Fine Arts, 64; and Applied Science, 59.

Music at the graduation exercises was furnished by the university commencement band, directed by Charles Minelli. The Rev. Roger Mills Rice, Jr., pastor of the Athens Presbyterian Church, gave the invocation and benediction.

Earlier in the day the graduates, their families, and friends attended baccalaureate services in the auditorium. Bishop

John King Mussio of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Steubenville delivered the baccalaureate sermon on the subject "A Graduate Looks Forward."

Another important activity of the weekend was a Friday meeting of the Ohio University Board of Trustees in which C. Don McVay of Leroy was elected chairman for the coming year. Every member of the board attended the meeting. Current members include Mr. McVay; Fred W. Crow, Pomeroy; Fred H. Johnson, Columbus; Joseph B. Hall, Cincinnati, retiring chairman; H. E. Frederick, Marysville; Harvey Jordan, Pittsburgh, who was elected vice chairman; John W. Galbreath, Columbus, and Gordon K. Bush, Athens.

An estimated 4000 persons were in Athens for Commencement Day and Alumni Day.

Alumni Day —1955

ALUMNI DAY, June 11, marked the return of more than 400 former students, the beginning of class organization, and the renewal of old acquaintances. Registering at the University Center, alumni started the round of Saturday events by taking bus tours of the campus.

At noon more than 350 joined in the annual Alumni Luncheon in the Center Ballroom. Russell P. Herrold, president of the Alumni Association, presided over the meeting and Alumni Secretary Martin L. Hecht served as toastmaster. Following an address by President John C. Baker, certificates of merit were awarded to 11 distinguished alumni, and representatives of nine reunion classes gave brief talks.

Rain prevented holding the evening supper under the elms, but almost 1400 alumni, 1955 graduates, families, and friends attended the affair, switched at the last minute to a buffet supper in the Center.

Saturday evening was spent in individual class parties held in the various housing units where alumni stayed, in the Center, or other favorite locations.

In organizing the classes, reunion groups elected class secretaries, program chairmen, and gift project chairmen, and made plans to contact all members of their classes. Complete details of each class organization and projects, as well as an explanation of the alumni re-organizational program, will appear in the first fall issue of the Alumnus magazine.

The Classes Of '55

By Robert E. Mahn

FOR THE FOUR members of the Class of 1855, commencement was on Wednesday, August 1, at the close of the third term of the regular school year. This was the order of events: Music by the McConnsville Brass Band; prayer; music; oration, "Young America," by Samuel W. King of Greensburg, Kentucky, a candidate for the B.S. degree; music; oration, "The Future of Nations," by Turner M. Marquart of Springfield, Ohio, candidate for the B.S. degree; philosophical oration, "The Triumph of Truth," by James K. Black of Lancaster, Ohio, candidate for the A.B. degree; music; valedictory by Elijah C. Dimmitt of Germantown, Kentucky, candidate for the A.B. degree; music; the conferring of degrees; music; benediction.

Here were four young men leaving college in an exciting period of history. The slavery debate was at its height. The Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854 had undone the sectional truce. There was threat of a divided nation, if not of civil war.

Sixteen Western states still remained to be formed. The Mississippi had been spanned by a railroad bridge the preceding year. The railroad was not to reach Athens, however, until the following year.

How well had the University prepared these young men for an active part in the affairs of a dynamic country? King and Marquart had completed the two year scientific course required for the B.S. degree. Black and Dimmitt had completed the four year collegiate (classical) course required for the A.B. degree. Apart from the requirement of Latin and Greek which Black and Dimmitt met, the four completed most of the same courses and were together in a number of classes.

This is what Dimmitt completed, in addition to fifteen courses in Greek and Latin, and "Ancient Geography and Greek and Roman Antiquities" in connection with these languages: Algebra, Geometry, Anatomy and Physiology, The Globe, Surveying, Chemistry, Philosophy, Mechanics, Mental Philosophy, Logic, Logic and Political Economy, Rhetoric, Evidences of Christianity and Natural Theology, Astronomy, Mineralogy, Moral Science, Mental Science, Analogy, The Law of Nations, and Geology. In addition he had "frequent and stated exercises in Elocution and Composition," and extra-course instruction in music and drawing. He attended lectures "on the preservation of health." Through participation in his literary society's exhibitions and contests he gained valuable experience in declamation and parliamentary procedures.

This course of study that gave Dimmitt the preparation necessary to enter Medical school, from which he graduated in 1857, gave Black the necessary preparation to enter the ministry. This same course of study, with the languages omitted, helped prepare King for his work as an accountant in the iron and coal industry, as a hydraulic and mechanical engineer, and as "superintendent of the first oil company that manufactured oil from cannel coal." It gave Marquart the background for law practice, which he established in Nebraska.

Marquart lived until 1894, Black until 1901, and King until 1912. Dimmitt, who as a student accumulated many absences because he was "unwell," and on one occasion had to return home before the close of a term because of illness, lived until 1920.

From a graduating class of four to 116, from two different degrees to seven, from a student body of 111 to 1072, from a faculty of five to 98, and from three buildings to 15—that was part of the story for Dimmitt of the University's development from the date of his graduation until the year of his death sixty-five years later. But look at the picture today, only thirty-five years after Dimmitt's death. The Class of 1955 numbered 546. Collectively they earned eighteen different degrees, including four graduate degrees. When they enrolled for their senior year students on campus numbered 5238, and the faculty 340. Principal buildings totaled 45.

To speculate on what your alma mater and its commencement will be like a century hence would be interesting. But to keep in touch with a dynamic Ohio University and to note its year to year progress will prove far more satisfying.

A program of taking human relations classes into industrial plants has proved reciprocally beneficial to industry and Ohio University.

New Horizons For Industrial Supervisors

By F. Patrick Collins, '50

FROM THE BOARD of directors of a corporation to the lowest supervisory level, the major task is the effective use of resources of men, money, and machines. Of the three, the most unpredictable and uncontrollable component part is man.

The effective use of people is a function encompassing everyone from the president on down. Personnel rules and procedures, the intangible tools employed by management, are expected to shape, guide, and produce the desired action. But, unfortunately, this action is not easily accomplished.

Today industry is looking for newer and better approaches to this problem. One result has been a reciprocally beneficial program with institutions such as Ohio University in offering the case study method employed in human relations classes to large industrial concerns.

The stage for Ohio University's part in this movement was set as early as 1945 when several members of the faculty were selected to participate in the human relations case study method at Harvard University. Some spent as little as two weeks on the Harvard campus, while others remained as long as one year for study.

In September, 1947, the first classes were offered in Human Relations on the Ohio University campus, and it is an integral part of the present-day curriculum.

Supervisory training programs utilizing the case study method had been successful with some companies in the Eastern and Midwestern sections of the United States following World War II. When in 1950, a request to teach all human relations courses in Ohio for the Pennsylvania Railroad was presented to Ohio University, the University was ready for the challenge.

Professor Albert C. Gubitz was selected to head the program because of his effective administration of the World War II Engineering, Management, and Science War Training program, and later direction of the University's branch colleges and public relations departments.

After consultation with President John C. Baker and a conference with railroad officials in Columbus, at which time it was decided to offer the first class to a top management group before including the line supervisors, Professor Gubitz selected Dr. Bernard R. Black of the Human Relations Department to teach the first group. The initial section met in November, 1950, at Columbus.

The Case Method

Through the new course, supervisors, like the students at Ohio University, used the case method to develop the habits and skills of analysis, judgment, and action important to people in all walks of life. Participants discussed and analyzed actual situations which were objectively reported in "cases", including actual quotations of conversations which gave rise to some human relations problem.

By developing their insight and understanding, the supervisors established a more realistic and useful way of thinking in their relations with employees. The dynamic discussion of real life problems assisted each supervisor in redefining in his own mind the necessary skills, techniques, and insights to get the job done with and through people.

Timken Roller Bearing Company located in Canton became interested in the plan in 1952. Their personnel representative visited the OU campus yearly to interview graduating seniors for possible employment. After discussing the program with Professor Gubitz, the Timken representative arranged a meeting with President William E. Umstatt of his company. Dr. Gaige B. Paulsen began the first classes with the company's top management groups that same year.

Six additional OU instructors were utilized in completing the programs with Pennsylvania Railroad and the Timken Company, training approximately 2000 supervisory personnel by the summer of 1954.

Certain guiding principles were set down at the start of both programs. Supervisory groups were to be held to a limit of approximately 20 to a class, and the program was to be on a voluntary basis.

The instructors interviewed privately each supervisor who was to attend their classes. This survey interview was to acquire a better understanding of industrial background and experience which might help give more significance to the classroom presentation.

Both companies were informed in advance that Ohio University instructors were not to recommend policy changes, and the class discussions were to be kept in strict confidence. The instructor in turn tried to make it clear to each class group that he was there as an educator and not as a representative of management.

Already there is evidence of many constructive values which come from the close relationship of educational institution to industrial concern and university faculty to practical industrial experience.

A lasting effect of good will from industry toward Ohio University is possible from the Industrial Relations program. From the unsolicited testimony given by supervisors who witnessed or heard of positive improvements in working relationships, it can be assumed that the rewards to industry and the men have been fruitful. To what degree is not easily ascertained. However, a follow-up study may be planned.

Pat Collins, Ohio University's assistant director of off-campus relations, is one of eight instructors who have taken the program of human relations into industry. Because of his close association with the program, he has made a detailed study of its results.

An Ohio University graduate of 1950, Mr. Collins has been on the public relations staff of his alma mater for five years. Among his duties are planning visitations to high schools, preparing general and departmental brochures for distribution to prospective students, and making arrangements for visitors to the campus. Mrs. Collins is the former Mary Lou Pash, '53.

To the university instructor, the program has opened up new horizons. Getting out of the classroom and into the field of industrial experience has a significant influence on his methods of disseminating knowledge, utilizing practical experience to develop new ideas and teaching skills.

The case study method of teaching human relations had its beginning at Harvard University. Industrial studies conducted in 1926 and later years under Elton Mayo and L. J. Henderson of the Harvard faculty brought to light the impact of personal and social determinants of productivity and cooperative behavior.

The case itself is a factual presentation of a human relations problem. Writing is difficult. The author of such cases must remain as unbiased as possible in relating the facts and questions of individuals in the action situations, since the study will be based upon the information given.

In the classes for supervisory personnel of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Timken Roller Bearing Company, the instructor tried to (1) encourage all of the supervisory employees to get the facts that had a bearing on the case presented; (2) from the facts determine what gave rise to the situation; and (3) determine all possible courses of action, remembering that there could be several possible solutions, some better than others.

Getting Action

Definite changes in methods of accomplishing action which came from taking the Industrial Relations course were related to the professors by class members.

One superintendent stated that because of the suggestions he received from the class discussion of cases, he had reversed his previous method of obtaining cooperation. His former method had been to "tell" the men under him how he wanted a job done. This arbitrary method had caused strained relations with his men and provoked some nasty situations.

When the problem arose on how to transport some lifts from one section of the plant to another, the superintendent went to the truck drivers with the problem and "asked" them how to do it. The drivers were pleased by this recognition and responded by not only solving the problem but also by doing it rapidly and in a friendly manner.

Handling Problems

Another supervisor stated that his immediate supervisor would give him orders to get a particular job done, but while the job was still in the process of completion, his boss would criticize him in front of the men for not doing the job right. After being in the class, the man watched for his boss and explained what he was doing, why he was doing it that way, and other details about the job before his supervisor could blow up. This seemed to have resolved the man's difficulties.

One professor reported that he found his beginning groups to be skeptical of the Industrial Relations classes when they were first being offered. The participants had been subjected to all kinds of training features through their company, and they felt this was to be "more of the same." This skepticism was not true after men with long experience had taken the course and given verbal support to the program.

The concrete factual accounts of the case method, related directly to experience in industrial situations, gave the foremen a common vehicle of information from which they could test their personal attitudes and beliefs.

A few members of the classes seemed to have very fixed attitudes. However, the vast majority of the foremen reported that they liked the case study method. One member of a class brought in a company problem during a discussion. In that instance, the professor felt that only a few points of view were obtained because of the close personal involvement. By using outside cases, the men were able to identify themselves with many different roles and, therefore, see themselves that much better.

Some of the good effects of this type of training for foremen and supervisors have been an increased art of listening to human problems, the ability to look at a problem from several points of view rather than just one, and the opportunity for the foremen to seek their own solutions to problems instead of being given a lot of advice.

Tangible Results

One of the best examples of tangible results of the classes came from a superintendent who found it necessary to close a section of track which served several small towns. Under his former method of operation, this man would have issued orders to close the track and let it go at that. After taking the Industrial Relations course, however, he decided to go around to the towns affected and talk to civic groups and clubs, telling them what the problem was and why it was necessary to take such action. When it became necessary to close the section of track, the people in the areas involved cooperated and maintained good will toward the company.

No neat package of answers can be drawn up to answer all of the problems of personnel management, but the case study method of influencing human relationships has been a step in the right direction toward solving many of these problems.

A good supervisor must know many things. He must know the technical aspects of his job and accept the responsibility placed on him by management. He must cooperate, organize, plan, counsel, and lead his workers to a desired form of effective action.

To observe and to grow individually, to realize there is no one answer to a problem, and to acquire a useful way of thinking are some of the basic elements developed by the industrial relations program offered by Ohio University.

BAND'S EYE VIEW of leader gives picture of deep concentration seldom noticed by listeners.

ARRANGING SESSIONS sometimes last all night when a big engagement is coming up.

TAPING NEW ARRANGEMENTS is modern method of testing for weak spots and mistakes that must be corrected in time for the big dance.

THE HOWIE CHAPMAN BAND, typical of the dance bands on campus, plays for Ohio University's Military Ball.

Music For Dancing

By Betty Chapman

"HOW ABOUT playing a mambo?" A band leader is constantly being asked to play request numbers. But few people realize the work involved in keeping up with the latest dance fads, or, for that matter, any of the many details involved in maintaining a college dance band.

The leader, of course, assumes the greatest responsibility. He is the arranger, press agent and chief investor in the band. He must be a diplomat as well, in satisfying both the audience and the members of the band—a typical "mister-in-between." He must sell the band to the campus while creating a good reputation for it. He has to keep the music up-to-date, sometimes spending many days arranging a number to fit the particular style of his band. It is up to him to keep the equipment in good condition. He is at the dance many hours before anyone else, setting up the band. He stays after everyone has left, taking the stands and music down.

The members of the band rehearse several times a week, in addition to individual practice. They, too, have a responsibility to their public to do the best job possible. These musicians are not always music majors. They often use the money from the band jobs to help pay college expenses.

The leader and the members are, first of all, college students and must spend many hours studying and participating in other campus activities.

In spite of the long hours of work necessary to insure the band's continued success, however, their music is a source of enjoyment to them as well as to the dancers.

Alumni Honor Professor

A veteran Ohio University professor will attend a meeting of the International Commission on Illumination in Zurich, Switzerland this month—thanks to a group of thoughtful former students.

Dr. D. B. Green, chairman of the Department of Electrical Engineering, and a faculty member for 29 years, previously declined an invitation to be a member of the U. S. National Committee to the international parley because of the high travel expenses.

A check for nearly $700 presented to him on behalf of former students of "Doc" Green changed his mind about the cost, however, and he will now be taking his place at the Zurich meetings alongside Arthur A. Brainerd, president of the U. S. Committee, and a 1915 OU graduate.

Behind the move to support Dr. Green's trip abroad was C. Paul Stocker, '26, president of the Lorain Products Corporation. Mr. Stocker was instrumental in seeing that former students were contacted by mail to inform them of the honor that came to their former professor in the form of the invitation to attend the Zurich meeting.

Department Created

A newly-created Radio, Television and Audio-Visual Services Department at Ohio University will be headed by Associate Professor Vincent J. Jukes, '30.

Presently observing his 25th year on the Dramatic Arts and Speech faculty of his alma mater, Professor Jukes has served during the past three years as chairman of the sesquicentennial committee.

In his new position, his first duty will be to organize the program which in the past has represented contributions by various departments in the university. The long-range goal will be the establishment of a center administering to university needs for film, color slide, recording, and other graphic productions.

Involved in the program also would be the storage of the production equipment and the providing of operators and technicians needed to carry out the services.

The center would include a film library, a projection room to accommodate classes for film showings, and a regular schedule of general interest films for the entire university. Movies, slides, and still photographs would be available for classroom and public use, and for assistance in public relations and alumni projects.

The present Audio-Visual Aids Program Committee will be retained intact to act as an executive committee for the program. Scheduled for appointment by the new director will be a subcommittee with selections from major divisions of the university to gather information as to needs and projects to be considered.

Information will be considered by the executive committee on the basis of what is needed most and what can be done with present equipment and services. As the equipment and personnel increase the services will gradually expand.

Fellowships Received

Dr. Victor Goedicke, professor of mathematics and astronomy, and Dr. Carl H. Denbow, professor of mathematics, have been selected to receive Ford Foundation Fellowships, permitting them a year of research away from the OU campus. The Fellowships are in the amount of the regular salary of the recipients plus traveling expenses.

Dr. John F. Cady, professor of history, has been awarded a John Simon Guggenheim Fellowship, valued at $3000, to complete research already underway on a political history of modern Burma. Earlier in the year Dr. Cady and his wife were awarded Fulbright grants which will take them and their family to the University of Rangoon in Burma.

Dr. Cady expects to be there from September, 1955, to March, 1956, when he will continue research in London at the Public Records Office and British

Dr. Goedicke and Dr. Denbow plan to complete research on a joint study, the philosophy of mathematics and curriculum trends in mathematics, at Harvard. Dr. Goedicke will also spend some time at the University of Chicago.

The Ford Fellowships won by the two math professors are the third and fourth ones ever to be awarded members of the OU faculty. Previous Ford Fellowships went to Dr. Paul M. Kendall and Dr. Carl G. Gustavson.

Four Professors Retire

Four Ohio University faculty members retired this month after an accumulative 94 years of service on the campus.

They are Associate Professor Frank B. Gullum, on the chemistry faculty since 1918; Professor Harry H. Peckham, who joined the English Department in 1921; Dr. John A. Hess, professor of German since 1927; and Dr. E. Herndon Hudson, director of the Ohio University Health Service since 1940.

Professor Gullum, a native of Hamden, Ohio, graduated from Ohio University in 1907. The next two years he taught at Piqua and Chillicothe schools, followed by nine years at Columbus East High School. At all three schools he coached baseball and football and taught chemistry.

Returning to OU in 1918, he spent the next two years as a member of the chemistry faculty, coach of football, basketball, and baseball, and athletic director. He has devoted full-time to teaching chemistry since 1920, earning his master's degree in that field from Ohio State in 1923.

Professor Peckham is a graduate of his hometown Hiram (Ohio) College and the University of Chicago. He did further study at Columbia, Harvard, Michigan, and Wisconsin. Before coming to OU he taught English at North Carolina State College and Purdue University.

Among Professor Peckham's writings while at OU are "Gotham Yankee," a biography of William Cullen Bryant; "The College Writer;" and "A History of English Literature."

Dr. Hess, a native of Perry, Ill., holds degrees from the University of Kansas and Indiana University. He taught languages at both universities for a total of 20 years before coming to OU as chairman of the German Department in 1927.

He is the author of some 45 articles and books dealing with the study and teaching of languages. Also a noted reviewer of other works, he has published more than 30 such reviews. His extensive writings warranted him positions in past years as both assistant managing editor of the "Modern Language Journal" and review editor of "The German Quarterly."

Dr. Hudson, a recognized authority on tropical diseases, studied at Millikin University in Decatur, Ill., the University of Pennsylvania, and the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine.

Before coming to OU as director of the Health Center in 1940, his career had taken him to the American University in Beirut, Lebanon; Blackburn College, Carlinville, Ill.; University Hospital, Philadelphia; Deir-az-Zor, Syria, where he founded and directed the Presbyterian Medical Center; and Clifton Springs (N.Y.) Sanitarium.

Dr. Hudson served in both World Wars and in 1950-51 his 12 years experience in medical work among Arabs was recognized with his appointment as director and chief medical advisor for a UN World Health Organization project in Iraq.

Book Published

Dr. Carl G. Gustavson, associate professor of history, is the author of a new textbook, "A Preface to History," published by McGraw-Hill.

Purpose of the book is to help the college level history student "read between the lines" of history. Such general concepts as the relationship of the past to the present, the nature of social forces, causation, change, and continuity are designated as tools which enable the student to use history information for himself, rather than engage in rote learning.

Described as "eminently readable and pedagogically sound" by the publishers, the text is designed primarily as a "second book" for introductory courses in European or world history. The chapters parallel the successive periods studied in Modern European History and each concept or historical phenomenon is illustrated by references to a particular one of these periods.

A native of Vinton, Iowa, Dr. Gustavson earned his A.B. degree at Augustana College, Rock Island, Illinois, his A.M. at the University of Illinois, and his Ph.D. at Cornell University. He served on the faculties of Lake Forest College and Miami University before coming to Ohio University in 1945. In 1953 he was awarded a Ford Foundation Fellowship for the improvement of teaching.

Soul Of A University

By Marilyn Dilley, '54

EVERY UNIVERSITY and college, worthy of the name, higher education has a heart and a soul that give it life for its existence. The living, breathing heart is composed of students, instructors, and administrators.

The soul, made of stone or brick, is the school's library, in which all educational activities center. Achievements of one are useless unless compared with the achievements of the other—the soul, quiet and stimulating, the heart, vigorous and ambitious.

A typical, modern college library is the Edwin Watts Chubb Library of Ohio University.

Modern university libraries were unheard of when Ohio University was founded, 150 years ago. Individuals owned private collections of books which were loaned out or given to students.

These private collections, in turn, were the beginnings of literary societies whose members gathered to read and discuss their books. Students were often members or were given permission to use the books for study.

The Coonskin Library

Before this time, the only library in this area was the Coonskin Library of Ames Township. This institution, established in 1804, on the proprietary plan, was the result of far-sighted thinking by such pioneers as George Ewing, Josiah True and some 50 others.

This phenomenon in the wilderness was officially known as the Western Library Association. In 1804, 51 books, the beginning of the collection, were bought from profits of coonskins sold in Boston, hence the nickname, Coonskin Library.

Book titles from the original Coonskin Library are now located in the Coonskin Library Room of the University Center.

In 1904, Ohio University felt the need of a central library available to all students. Through Andrew Carnegie, library benefactor, the college built Carnegie Hall as its first library. One condition stated by Mr. Carnegie was that the University provide library services for the people of Athens.

The library was moved to a new building in 1930 to meet demands of the rapidly growing student body. This building was named in honor of Edwin Watts Chubb, professor, dean and acting president of the University, who will celebrate his 90th birthday August 25.

Dean Chubb, born in Lebanon, Pa., joined the Ohio faculty in 1900 as professor of English. He later was appointed Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. Twice he became acting administrator upon the death of the president.

Before Dean Chubb's retirement in 1936, he was a delegate to the National Council of Phi Beta Kappa and was instrumental in bringing a chapter to the University campus. He served as both president and secretary of the Ohio chapter.

Dean Chubb lived in Athens until 1953 when he moved to Greenville, Delaware. He is the author of "Stories of Authors" and "Masters of English Literature."

On July 1, 1949, Frank N. Jones became librarian of the Edwin Watts Chubb Library. Before coming to Ohio, he was on the staffs of the Boston Public, New York Public, Columbia, and Harvard Libraries. Mr. Jones received degrees from Harvard University and Columbia University.

In addition to his duties as administrator of all library services, Mr. Jones is professor of library science at the University.

In contrast to the 19th century literary societies, the modern library is described by Mr. Jones as "A physical plant in which can be kept a much larger bulk of information than one person can handle."

Modern Facilities

Statistically speaking, the Edwin Watts Chubb Library is doing just that. Students have access to 227,022 volumes, including, periodical sets, documents, and pamphlets. A reference collection of several thousand volumes, and more than one thousand current periodicals and newspapers keep students abreast of day-by-day advancements.

Modern facilities in Ohio University's library include one reading room in which smoking is permitted, a section for group discussions, a pleasure reading and record listening room, and free access to the book stacks, instead of the closed stacks of an earlier day.

An interesting feature of this library is the program for displays of various kinds such as original art work by local students and professors, and historical material depicting the school's growth and other subjects.

Fulfilling its promise to serve the community, the library is open to Athens' citizens. In addition, one room contains a branch of the Athens County Library.

An extensive collection of books for younger readers is available to Athens' children and is also used as a laboratory by students in education.

Two major problems of any library are obtaining and disposing of books. Selection of books at the "Chubb" Library is done by recommendations from students and faculty and by professional, full-time checking of book lists by library personnel.

Between eight and nine thousand pieces are added each year, while close to one thousand pieces are discarded. Such books are burned if outdated, or if still useful in certain fields, they may be given to smaller schools.

So, the library "soul" changes and grows, constantly giving fresh information to the educational "heart" of America's students.

FOUND in the several thousand reference books lining walls. A card file is located in the center of the room.

ART EXHIBITS receive full attention in the Edwin Watts Chubb Library. In this room outstanding exhibits are displayed throughout the year.

Schnectady

Ohio University's Alumni Association gained a new chapter on March 26 when alumni from Schenectady, New York, held an organizational meeting at the Edison Club in Rexford. Thirty-nine persons attended the successful dinner meeting.

Al Gubitz, Jr., '52, who was instrumental in starting plans for the club, was elected president. Other officers, also active in planning the meeting, are Richard Ingraham, '49, vice president; Mrs. Eugene Wachspress (Natalie Gross, '52), secretary; and Robertson "Bud" Hogate, '51, treasurer.

Alumni Secretary Martin L. Hecht told the group about alumni club organizational work, and showed color slides of the new Ohio University buildings and a movie on OU events.

Mrs. Martin McVay won the door prize of a copy of the "Hoover History" and Mrs. Vincent Talley (Phyllis Patterson, '50) won a Wedgewood plate.

Lancaster

The first of a series of alumni chapter meetings honoring President John C.

Baker on his tenth anniversary at OU was held in Lancaster on April 28. Outgoing Chapter President John V. Pierce, '50, presided over the Fairfield County Chapter dinner meeting, and Paul J. Hyme, '38, served as toastmaster.

More than 100 members attended the affair which was held in the Elks Home.

One of the features of the evening was the presentation of a $350 Ohio University scholarship to Miss Jacalyn Jean Barr of Amanda. The scholarship was the first annual award given by the Fairfield County Alumni Chapter. Miss Barr's mother is the former Marie Samsel, '34.

Among the guests from OU were Brandon T. Grover, Professor Albert C. Gubitz, Dean and Mrs. E. J. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. Martin L. Hecht, and Clark E. Williams. Special guests were Mr. and Mrs. William V. Fisher of Lancaster. A reception was held for the guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Herrold, preceding the dinner.

Officers elected for the coming year are: Melvin Johnson, '51, president; Bernard McCashen, '33, men's vice president; and Fern Hansel, '30, re-elected secretary-treasurer.

Mayor John Harvey Weis of Lancaster gave the invocation. Music was furnished by an ensemble of men from the Ohio University Men's Glee Club.

During the business part of the meeting it was explained that the Greater New York City Alumni Chapter will be made up of the following areas: Westchester, Nassau, and Queens Counties, Northern New Jersey, and the boroughs of New York City. Representatives from each area will serve on a board of directors, from which an executive committee will be chosen.

Elected to head the board of directors were Mr. Kennedy, chairman; Mr. Fri, vice chairman; and Ann Saum, '27, secretary. They will also serve on the executive committee, along with H. B. Dallas, '31; Marty Blau, '48; Dr. H. L. Skinner, '22; and Amos Kincaid, '23.

After an introduction of members, Mr. Blumenthal turned over the meeting to the chairman of the program committee, Dr. Stanley Dougan, '14, who introduced Mayor Florian Boyd of Palm Springs.

Mayor Boyd then presented President Baker with the key to the city of Palm Springs. Not to be outdone, Morry Rabin, '36, on behalf of the city of Long Beach, presented President Baker with a gold key to that city, and an engraved invitation to hold the next meeting there.

President Baker presented the featured address of the evening and also narrated a showing of color slides from the campus.

Wins Poetry Contest

ALVIN ROSSER, '50, of Chargin Falls, Ohio, is the winner of the 1955 Emerson Poetry Contest for students and alumni of Ohio University. His poem, "We Are Sighing," was named best of this year's entries by a panel of four judges.

The contest, which is held every second year, is financed by interest from a sum of $1000, bequeathed to the Board of Trustees by W. D. Emerson, of the class of 1833. The award is divided into three prizes of $60, $40, and $20.

Second prize went to Marilyn A. Francis, '41, of Phoenix, Arizona, for her poem "Ixionian." Mrs. Mary Whitcomb Hess, M.A., '37, placed third with her poem "Physicist on Vacation." Honorable mentions were "Moon-Snow" by Robert Leslie Stocker, a freshman from Newark, N. J.; and "Prognosis," whose author is anonymous.

Judges of this year's contest were Professor Chad Walsh of Beloit College, Wisconsin; Professor Paul L. Bennet of Denison University; and Dr. and Mrs. Jarvis Thurston, co-editors of Perspective, at Washington University in St. Louis.

The daily Post will be a four-page paper. Five eight-page editions are also planned for the special occasions throughout the year.

The Bobcat Roundup

By Rowland Congdon, '49

"THAT'S THE WAY the ball bounces" was heard from two of four of Ohio University's spring sports coaches following their respective seasons.

It was the retort of Baseball Coach Bob Wren, who saw his Bobcats finish with an 11-10 record and fail to gain the NCAA playoffs for the first time in four years. It was also the retort of Tennis Coach Bob Bartels, in his first year, who saw his team fail to win a single dual engagement in nine attempts, but come close enough in several matches to salvage at least three of them.

Wren admitted that "just about everything possible happened to the Bobcats this year—breaks which had been going our way for several seasons."

OU's Golf Coach Kermit Blosser apparently had no qualms about the way the ball bounced this past season for his squad came up with the school's fifth straight Mid-American Conference championship.

And Track Coach Jim Johnson had no commitment one way or the other since the only ball used in track is the 16-pound shot, and that comprises only one of 15 events in a track meet. Anyway, the harriers won one dual meet, lost two, and finished second in a triangular event.

Golf

The golfers finished their season with nine straight dual wins before losing the finale to Marshall, 15½-14½. Earlier they had trounced the Herd 25½-4½. A record of 12-4 thus was chalked up by Blosser's crew prior to finishing second to Ohio State in the Ohio Intercollegiate at Columbus and winning the conference meet at Athens by 23 strokes.

In the 16 dual engagements, Dick Smail finished as medalist or co-medalist five times, Dave Moore four and Dudley Kircher and Scotty Russell three each.

Russell, Smail, Jim Leonard and Jack Algeo are the seniors on the squad. Kircher is a sophomore and Moore a junior. They provided two of the highlights of the season. Dud shot a 69 in one round of the Ohio Intercollegiate on the tough Scarlet course of Ohio State and Moore was co-medalist with Smail in the conference tourney.

Not counting the championship rounds, here are averages of the 11 squad members at the end of the season:

Smail, playing 15 rounds, finished with a 74.8 average. He is from Bay Village. Moore, from Cincinnati, had a 76.5 average in 16 rounds of golf; Algeo, Athens, 76.6 in 14; Kircher, Dayton, 76.7 in 17 rounds; Russell, Parma, 76.9 in 15.

Jim Leonard, Cleveland, and Don Todd, Dayton, had identical 77.3 averages in 12 and 13 rounds of golf, respectively. Ray Leonard, Jim's brother, shot three rounds for a 79 average; Tom Welsh, Xenia, 80 in four; Warren Worthley, Mansfield, 81 in five and Jerry Knox, Mt. Vernon, 81 in four rounds.

Baseball

The diamond men finished in a 4-4 third place tie with Miami in the Conference race behind Western Michigan, the champion, and Bowling Green.

Highlight of the season, probably, was

Bill Hinkle's no-hit victory against Western Reserve at Gordon Park, Cleveland, on May 7. Hinkle is a sophomore right hander from Columbus and a near-four point student in engineering.

After a slow start, the Bobcats began to jell towards the end of the season and finished with a winning record. Coach Wren has never had a losing season in his seven years at the Bobcat baseball position.

The Bobcats played four extra-inning games this past season, losing three of them. They won three of seven games decided by one run. Though one of Wren's lightest hitting teams, they out-hit their opposition in 21 games with a .266 average to .225.

Only three homeruns were hit in the 21 contests, all by Andy Chonko, senior first baseman from Cleveland.

Dick Fishbaugh, captain and second baseman, led the hitters with a .352 average in 21 games, followed closely by third baseman Bill Frederick's .341 mark. They were the only regulars to hit over .300, but John Bier, senior right handed pitcher from Sandusky, finished with a .333 stick average with 12 hits out of 36 trips.

Bier finished an outstanding hurling career with an 8-4 senior year record and a 1.7 earned run average. In addition, he gave up only 17 walks in 92 2/3 innings, striking out 71 batters and allowing 17 hits.

His career won-lost record is 21-8 for three seasons. He originally started his diamond doings at OU as an outfielder with the freshman team, but was told he would not make the grade there. With a strong throwing arm, he was shifted to pitching and under Wren's astute eye, became one of the leading hurlers in Bobcat baseball history.

Wren loses only five seniors, Fishbaugh, Frederick, Bier, Chonko, and Don Lundstrom, Canton, shortstop.

That is his whole first string infield and pitcher, spots which will have to be filled next year. But a pitching staff of Hinkle, Jerry Driscoll, Cleveland; Dave Wickersham, East Springfield, Pa.; Gordon Griffey, Conneaut, and Dick Hummel, Cleveland, will return. All saw service this season and did commendable work.

Track

Rudy Koletic, Erland Ahlberg and Frank Nixon were the leading point-getters for Jim Johnson this season.

Koletic, senior from Cleveland, marked up 40½ points in three events—high and low hurdles and high jump. He took five first places, three seconds, and two thirds, one a split, to account for the total.

Nixon, Lakewood junior, did his point-getting—36—in distance running. He copped six first places and two seconds, competing in the one and two-mile runs and the 880 yard run, or half-mile.

Ahlberg, Conneaut junior, gained his 38-point total by competing in four separate events—the 100 and 220 yard dashes, low hurdles and broad jump. He collected three first places, five seconds, four thirds and a tie for third, and two fifths, in the conference meet.

Ron Ramlow and Ellsworth Holden were the only other senior point-getters who will be absent from next year's team, which Johnson believes will be much improved.

He praised, especially, the work of Sophomore Bob Sawyers, Cleveland, who he claims could be a national champion in the 880 yard run before he finishes his track career at OU.

Sawyers was next in line for point-getting honors to the above named trio, with 18. The Bobcats' only victory was a 98-49 conquest of Kent State.

Tennis

Though losing all nine dual engagements, the tennis squad showed promise for the future.

Al Ludlum, sophomore from Lakewood, won six of seven singles matches and moved from sixth position on the team to third before the season was over. In doubles competition, he and his partner, Roger Fenneman, Mansfield junior, were the only ones to win, taking three of nine doubles matches.

The Bobcat netters this season were led, in the number one spot, by Bill Lagonegro, Elmira, N. Y., senior, who won four and lost five singles matches. Paul Cowan, Elkhart, Ind., senior, was No. 2 spot netter, but failed to win any of his nine singles matches.

Only other netter able to win was Joe Saggio, Cleveland junior, who copped three of nine singles engagements.

Seniors on the squad, besides Lagonegro and Cowan were John Kemp, Mt. Vernon, and Dave Bowman, Canton.

Spring Sports Meet

Ohio took the golf crown with a four-man total of 593 strokes over 36 holes of the Athens Country Club course. Dave Moore and Dick Smail were co-medalists with scores of 145. Other Bobcat swingers were Dudley Kircher, 150, and Jack Algeo, 153.

Other team scores were Kent State and Bowling Green, 616; Miami 627, Western Michigan 639, Marshall 665, Western Reserve 679 and Toledo 688.

The Bobcats finished fourth in the track meet with Miami winning its eighth straight title. Team scores were Miami 85½, Western Michigan 73, Bowling Green 44½, Ohio U. 28½, Western Reserve 11¾, Kent State 9¾ and Marshall 0. Toledo has no track team.

No OU man won a track event, but Bob Sawyers finished second in the 880 and Ron Ramlow and Roger Thomas tied for second in the pole vault.

Highlight of the meet was the 59 feet, 1 inch shot put mark of Miami's Tom Jones, the best collegiate shot put mark in the nation for 1955.

In tennis, the Bobcats finished in a tie for fourth place with Kent State, each getting two points. Only OU men to garner wins in the tournament were Al Ludlum and Bill Lagonegro in singles matches. Each was defeated in the second round, however.

Team totals in the tourney, were Western Michigan 17, Miami 13, Bowling Green and Marshall, 3, Ohio U.

and Kent State 2, and Toledo and Western Reserve 1.

With the spring meets, Western Reserve ended its membership in the Mid-American Conference. No replacement is contemplated for the time being.
